

Will He Ever Pop The Question?

Contributed by Christian Carter

Want to get married?

NOTE: If and when you find the right man- are you 100% confident you know how to make it work?

And I mean confident in the way where the man you're with is not only hopelessly attracted and devoted to you- but he feels like he has to "pop the question" just to make sure he gets to stay with you.

Is this the kind of relationship and connection you know how to create with a man?

Or... is there a chance when you're with the right man that you'll again fall into some of the same predictable patterns that tear things apart?

What if the things you don't know about how men think when it comes to love, sex, fidelity and commitment could not only be keeping you from having the relationship you want-

But what if it's actually HURTING your relationship and accidentally pushing your man away from you?

The secret to why a man will fall deeply in love with you and never want anyone else in his life has everything to do with how much he feels you UNDERSTAND where's he's coming from... as a man.

I've developed a unique, in-depth program that reveals all the hidden secrets about how men think and feel in relationships - stuff even men don't know about themselves.

And it's all to help YOU create the kind of bonded relationship you've always dreamed of.

Check it out right now:<http://affiliates.hottopicmedia.com/z/65/CD147/&dp=843>

Hey,

I've noticed something fascinating that happens to a lot of fairly "good" relationships.

See if you can relate...

A couple has been dating for several months or a year or longer and they're getting along and have a great connection.

But even though they have a great time together and seem to be genuinely in love, the woman begins to wonder if her guy is finally going to either pop the question or make a more longer-term commitment - like moving in together.

To top it off, maybe her friends or family are giving her the impression that it's something THEY think should happen, too.

What started out as a comfortable, fairly happy relationship suddenly starts to feel STRAINED and awkward because the woman starts "pushing" the guy into something he's not ready for.

Hmmm...

Are you seeing yourself in this story at all?

Maybe it's something that you're going through right now?

Are you wondering if YOUR man is finally going to pop the question or buy you a ring and make that last big commitment to you soon ?

You wonder if he's just content to keep dating you forever, with no "real" commitment on the horizon...

Or if you will have a real and solid future together - one that you can feel good about and plan for.

So what's it's going to take to get him THINKING about and PLANNING your future together instead of just feeling "comfortable" with how things are with you now?

After all, you've been "serious" with him for a while now. You've been seeing each other exclusively, you've been saying "I love you" to each other and you plan vacations and trips together. You've even met each other's family.

So shouldn't a long-term commitment or proposal be the NEXT LOGICAL STEP?

If you're "living it," why not just make it official, right?

Actually, many men do think about it.

But does it happen JUST BECAUSE it's the next logical step, or because the woman is pushing for it, or does it happen based on SOMETHING ELSE?

Let's step back for a minute.

First of all, I want to bring something important to your attention.

If you're spending A LOT of time feeling worried and anxious about whether or not any more time is going to pass by without a ring or long-term commitment from your man, then this kind of anxiety can be a dangerous situation for your relationship.

You can be SETTING YOURSELF UP for a big let-down if things don't go exactly as you hope in the timeframe you've set up in your mind.

Not to mention all that anxiety and worry can cause you to come off as seeming "on edge" and irritable, which can send the WRONG signal to the guy.

If every time the topic of commitment is brought up you act "on edge", it can really freak him out and make him start to question your relationship.

He might wonder if he's done something wrong to make you feel that way...

And if he feels like the "where's this going?" discussion has come totally out of "left field" and doesn't understand where he stands in the commitment process he may start to feel mistrustful or resentful of you.

And if you're wondering if "dropping hints" or asking his friends or family for clues about "what he's thinking" about a more permanent commitment is a good strategy - think again.

That will actually have the OPPOSITE EFFECT of what you're hoping to achieve.

I hope you're starting to see how easy it is to create a bunch of negative feelings and unrealistic expectations around your relationship when you didn't intend to.

So why don't you step back for a minute and let me help you get some perspective here.

Just because you've made your own decision about where you want things to go in your relationship, it doesn't mean that something is necessarily automatically going to CHANGE in your relationship.

This is because a man doesn't commit to a woman JUST BECAUSE she says he should, or because it's a special time of year, or because it's been exactly so-many-months or years since you met.

Many guys aren't even AWARE of exactly how much time you've been together - or what that means to you.

So the fact that he's being loving and you're enjoying the time you spend together is not an indication IN ITSELF that a man is going to want to commit to you.

For a man, a commitment on the level of a proposal or a ring is the culmination of SEVERAL THINGS that happen at a much, much deeper level.

It's much deeper than feeling pressure from his friends or family who think he should "get serious" or "settle down."

It's much deeper than simply feeling like it's the next logical step in his great relationship with you.

In a man's mind, asking a woman to marry him or move in with him is an internal decision based on HOW HE FEELS when he's with you, and how he pictures his life with you in the future.

To find out exactly how a man reaches that decision, check out this link right now:<http://affiliates.hottopicmedia.com/z/65/CD147/&dp=843>

Let me ask you another question.

How can you tell if your hopes for the relationship are realistic or just wishful thinking?

When your expectations are UNREALISTIC, a few things might happen, and usually in this order:

-- You'll start to listen for "clues" about how your man is feeling that either prove or disprove that he wants to take the "next step." For example, if he asks you what kind of jewelry you like, you probably put a mental check-mark next to the "he wants a commitment" category. (Even though his question may have nothing to do with buying you "the ring.")

-- You'll instantly dismiss or "forget" any conversation or comment where he seems to not be "in sync" with what you want in your future together. If what he says doesn't fit with what you want, you choose to ignore it (consciously or subconsciously).

-- You fantasize about where your relationship will be a year or two from now, but you haven't actually had real discussions about it with him.

-- You have already told your closest friends and family members that you "think" he's going to propose soon, so the pressure is ON - in your mind and on HIM.

On the other hand, if you have realistic expectations based on HONESTY and good communication, chances are you won't have to worry that you're putting out bad "vibes" or misunderstanding each other.

Which means that getting a ring or a proposal will be a pleasant surprise instead of being a source of WORRY and TENSION all the time.

Here are a few other clues which will tell you that you are carrying UNREALISTIC expectations of your relationship:

1. YOU ASSUME HE WANTS WHAT YOU WANT.

When the woman feels such an amazing connection with a man, she assumes that he wants the same things she does from the relationship. The assumptions--such as automatically getting a commitment because things are "going well" and you've been dating a year or two - become so strong and real that they become BELIEFS.

When you start to BELIEVE things NEED to happen a certain way, you'll have a hard time even "accepting" it if your relationship differs from the way you picture it in your mind. And then, when/if it doesn't happen, it becomes an even more monumental "blow" to your relationship.

Women would like to think that a man should be able to "read their minds" because of the connection they share. Guess what? No one is a mind-reader, no matter how in love they are.

2. YOU HAVE HIDDEN OR UNSPOKEN EXPECTATIONS.

Do you expect your relationship to progress in a certain way or have particular goals that you have NOT discussed or shared with your boyfriend?

You may be hoping that he'll pop the question soon, but has the idea of a long-term, serious commitment even been a topic of discussion between you? If not, you may be setting yourself up for disappointment if you're not talking to him about what you want and need to be happy.

You may have put off talking to him about what you want simply because you're afraid you'll scare him off, or because you don't know how to approach the subject.

This can create a disconnect between what you both expect out of the relationship, which leads to misunderstandings, fights, resentment and hurt feelings.

By the way, if you want to know how to START a conversation about commitment, and exactly what to say and how to say it, check out Chapter 8 (page 247) in my e-book, "Catch Him & Keep Him."

I'll explain why one particular kind of approach works BETTER for getting him to start thinking about committing to you WITHOUT pleading, arguing, drama or tension.

Check it out right now if you haven't already:<http://affiliates.hottopicmedia.com/z/65/CD147/&dp=843>

Now, let's look at the third mistake you may be making:

3. YOU'RE THINKING COMMITMENT TOO SOON.

Have you already committed yourself to your relationship - physically, emotionally and otherwise - without "checking in" to make sure the man is AS INVESTED as you are?

For example, you and your man have amazing chemistry and everything is always intense when you're together - you always have deep and thoughtful conversations and the way you connect on a physical level is amazing. You assume things are "going somewhere" and you aren't seeing anyone else... or even considering it for that matter.

Are you sure that he's in the same place you are?

Does he think your relationship is headed toward serious, monogamous commitment and living together someday?

How do you know? Have you asked him? Or are you ASSUMING (re-read point #1 again) that he automatically wants what you want?

Sometimes women discover that their man wasn't thinking of a future together in the same way they were.

In other words, he was enjoying the time he was spending with you, but wasn't considering what it would be like to CREATE A LIFE TOGETHER or be exclusive.

You can imagine the conflict and hurt feelings that can develop when one or the other person finally opens up and admits where their head and heart are really at - and it doesn't match the other person's experience. Especially if you have been assuming these beliefs to be true for months - or EVEN YEARS.

Many women hold back from sharing their real feelings and desires because they're unsure of what a man is thinking, or how best to have "the talk" with him.

When all these pent-up feelings come out, they create intense "drama" because of all the passive-aggressive feelings that develop between the man and woman.

And if there's one thing men hate...it's a bunch of DRAMA from a woman about the relationship.

What does drama sound like?

You might find yourself saying things like,

"I thought this was going somewhere!"

"I'm not going to wait around forever, you know."

And before you know it, there's an awkwardness that develops, things feel strained, and he starts DOUBTING your relationship and his ability to make you happy.

Look, I'm not telling you this to discourage you from getting in touch with what you really NEED and WANT for your love life, and being able to share those thoughts with your man.

But I'd like to help you understand, from a man's perspective, how to look at your relationship CLEARLY and with realistic expectations based on what you BOTH want - instead of looking at it as something you "deserve" or that he "owes" you.

You with me here?

OK, good.

Now that you've figured out if your expectations are realistic or not, think about this:

Have you ever known a woman who didn't have to spend one single minute worrying or wondering whether or not her man was going to commit to her?

It just happened...and she didn't have to do anything out of the ordinary or have any kind of "heavy talk" with the man because he was the one begging HER for the commitment.

She didn't worry about where things were headed. She didn't have to threaten him that she would "move on" if he wasn't on board with having a REAL RELATIONSHIP.

Don't you wonder what special MINDSET OR QUALITY a woman like this has, because committed relationships and love come so easily and naturally for her?

It definitely takes a certain kind of woman to make a man feel like she's the one and ONLY woman he wants to be with...now, or in the future.

Would you like to know how to make your man feel this way about YOU?

The key factor that makes a man want to commit to a woman is whether he feels like he is BETTER OFF being in a committed relationship with her than being single.

He also needs to believe, without a doubt, that he is better off with her than ANY OTHER WOMAN.

If you can unlock a man's deep desire for true love and deep connection, you can avoid hearing the other kinds of fake EXCUSES they give when they're not ready.

Excuses like he "needs to figure out his career first", or "get his finances in order", or "figure out where his life is headed" before he can settle down with you.

I've put together an entire program that shows you exactly how to trigger a desire for LOVE AND COMMITMENT in a man...and avoid dealing with excuses, resistance and withdrawal.

A real and lasting commitment doesn't "just happen" - there are critical steps that have to happen along the way.

In my "From Casual To Committed" CD/DVD program, you'll also learn:

> How to get your man to come up with his OWN reasons for committing to you...and get him to ask you for a commitment FIRST

> How to initiate "the talk" with a man in a way that makes him EXCITED about getting closer and more emotionally intimate with you

> The only SURE-FIRE way to know with 100% accuracy whether your guy is into you for the long-term, or if you are wasting your time

...and tons more.

Check out the details for yourself right now:<http://affiliates.hottopicmedia.com/z/65/CD147/&dp=843>

I hope that you'll take the time to understand how commitment works for a man, so you can transition effortlessly from an uncertain "casual" relationship to a more meaningful and long-lasting one.

That way, you can actually RELAX and enjoy your relationship worrying about where it's going. You'll know exactly where your relationship is headed, and you'll feel a whole lot more SECURE about it.

I'll talk to you again soon,

Best of luck in Life and Love,

Your friend,

Christian Carter

Get Elite Advice From A Relationship Expert <http://www.elitemate.com/htm/counseling.htm>

American Singles <http://www.americansingles.com/Applications/MemberProfile/RegistrationStep1.aspx?prm=59020&lgid>

Singles With Cell Phones Text Message The Word Single To 47807
And Press Send To Connect With a Wireless Community Of Over 52 Million Singles World Wide

User: MsLantanaLakes My honey met me online and we have been together for 2 years now, we have so many things in common and he lives close to me in south FL.. When we met the chemistry was definitely there...it was hot. We were on each other so quick, and it's been hot and heavy ever since. We cannot get enough of each other.