

The truth about pick up lines.

Attracting a woman is not what you think!

Hey Guys,

Every now and then I get a call from a friend, wanting to know, "Hey John, got any pick up lines that work?"

For some reason, many guys think there are "secret sayings" that somehow cause women to instantly be attracted to them. Why this is, I don't know. The truth, however, is not what you might think.

What if everything you ever thought you knew about dating and relationships was just plain wrong? Would you keep doing the same things and getting the same results? Or would you try something new and radically different? To stop dating, and start living, go to <http://www.johnalanis.com/elite/> before this site is removed.

You see, the answer to the question is, "got any pick up lines that work" is, "that depends." Believe it or not it actually IS possible to see an attractive woman, and use your words to create attraction.

However, that does not mean going up to her and spouting a rehearsed line thinking that, and that alone will get you where you want to go. Using pickup lines with the expectation the line itself will create attraction is patently ridiculous.

But, if you see an attractive woman, and walk up to her with your best naughty boy smile on your face, look her right in the eye, and deliver a line in such a fashion that she "gets" the absurdity, then your chances of creating attraction are good.

What you do next, though is vitally important. When you she laughs, you need to laugh along with her, so she understands you both are laughing at a joke together. Then, once the ice is broken, you switch over to fun conversation and take the interaction from there.

When you do this, it shows her several things. One, you have the courage to come talk to her. Two, you have a quick wit, and can make her laugh. Three, you can laugh easily at yourself. And four, you have more facets to your personality than just the "fun guy," when you switch over to a more serious subject.

So, can pick up lines be effective? The answer is a surprising yes, when you put them to use in the context I described. But if you use them like the average guy does, expecting the pick up line to do all the work for you, you'll just be another loser to her--and the last thing any woman needs is another loser.

Use the line in the context of your personality, however, and you'll come across as very unique, and very different... a winner in a land of losers.

On with the fun...
