

Do you have opportunity eyes?

"successful businessmen have opportunity eyes."

Hey Guys,

When I first started out in business, one of the very first men I met who put me on the path to success was Ted Nicholas. Even back in 1996 he was known as an "old master" in direct marketing, and I paid attention to every word he said.

One of the things he told me that always stuck with me was this:
"successful businessmen have opportunity eyes."

What if everything you ever thought you knew about dating and relationships was just plain wrong? Would you keep doing the same things and getting the same results? Or would you try something new and radically different? To stop dating, and start living, go to <http://www.elitematelove.com> before this site is removed.

What that means is, not only are you constantly on the lookout for opportunity, you are also on the lookout for opportunities others can't see--and that is often where the big money is made.

Ted's point was you had to train yourself to have opportunity eyes, because oftentimes the opportunity wasn't apparent. Not only that, you have to be able to evaluate the opportunity to see if it is worth pursuing, sometimes to the point of putting everything else you're doing on hold.

The same thing holds true in attraction. You have to develop opportunity eyes, and then act on the opportunity because it IS fleeting.

For example, if you see an attractive woman in the gym at odd hours, you cannot say to yourself, "well, I'll talk to her next time," or "I can't wait to see her again." You've got to grab the opportunity, initiate the conversation and make another meeting happen.

Or maybe you're at the track running and you see an attractive woman coming towards you. You only have a split second--but that could mean the difference between a lifetime together and ships that passed in the night.

Most men do not wind up with the woman they want. It's because they have neither opportunity eyes, nor the will to act when it appears. If you develop them, you'll be the man with something few men ever get--the woman you really want.

On with the fun...
